Provider-Patient Email Communication Disclaimer

Risks of Using Email

The provider offers patients the opportunity to communicate by email. Transmitting patient information poses several risks of which the patient should be aware. The patient should not agree to communicate with the provider via email without understanding and accepting these risks. The risks include, but are not limited to, the following:

- The privacy and security of email communication cannot be guaranteed.
- Employers and online services may have a legal right to inspect and keep emails that pass through their system.
- Email is easier to falsify than handwritten or signed hard copies. In addition, it is impossible to verify the true identity of the sender, or to ensure that only the recipient can read the email once it has been sent.
- Emails can introduce viruses into a computer system, and potentially damage or disrupt the computer.
- Email can be forwarded, intercepted, circulated, stored or even changed without the knowledge or permission of the provider or the patient. Email senders can easily misaddress an email, resulting in it being sent to many unintended and unknown recipients.
- Email is indelible. Even after the sender and recipient have deleted their copies of the email, back-up copies may exist on a computer or in cyberspace.
- Use of email to discuss sensitive information can increase the risk of such information being disclosed to third parties.
- Email can be used as evidence in court.
- The provider uses encryption software as a security mechanism for email communications.
 - The patient:
 - agrees to and will comply with the use of encryption software; and
 - waives the encryption requirement, with the full understanding that such waiver increases the risk of violation of the patient's privacy.

Conditions of using email

The provider will use reasonable means to protect the security and confidentiality of email information sent and received. However, because of the risks outlined above, the provider cannot guarantee the security and confidentiality of email communication, and will not be liable for improper disclosure of confidential information that is not the direct result of intentional misconduct of the provider. Thus, patients must consent to the use of email for patient information. Consent to the use of email includes agreement with the following conditions:

- Emails to or from the patient concerning diagnosis or treatment may be printed in full and made part of the patient's medical record. Because they are part of the medical record, other individuals authorized to access the medical record, such as staff and billing personnel, will have access to those emails.
- The provider may forward emails internally to the provider's staff and to those involved, as necessary, for diagnosis, treatment, reimbursement, health care operations, and other handling. The provider will not, however, forward emails to independent third parties without the patient's prior written consent, except as authorized or required by law.
- Although the provider will endeavor to read and respond promptly to an email from the patient, the provider cannot guarantee that any particular email will be read and responded to within any particular period of time. Thus, the patient should not use email for medical emergencies or other time-sensitive matters.
- Email communication is not an appropriate substitute for clinical examinations. The patient is responsible for following up on the provider's email and for scheduling appointments where warranted.
- If the patient's email requires or invites a response from the provider and the patient has not received a response within a reasonable time period it is the patient's responsibility to follow up to determine whether the intended recipient received the email and when the recipient will respond.
- The patient should not use email for communication regarding sensitive medical information, such as sexually transmitted disease, AIDS/HIV, mental health, developmental disability, or substance abuse. Similarly, the provider will not discuss such matters over email.
- The patient is responsible for informing the provider of any types of information the patient does not want to be sent by email, in addition to those set out in the bullet above.
- The provider is not responsible for information loss due to technical failures.

Instructions for communication by email

To communicate by email, the patient shall:

- Limit or avoid using an employer's computer.
- Inform the provider of any changes in patient's email address.
- Include in the email: the category of the communication in the email's subject line, for routing purposes (e.g., 'prescription renewal'); and the name of the patient in the body of the email.
- Review the email to make sure it is clear and that all relevant information is provided before sending to the provider.
- Inform the provider that the patient received the email.
- Take precautions to preserve the confidentiality of emails, such as using screen savers and safeguarding computer passwords.
- Withdraw consent only by email or written communication to the provider.

- Should the patient require immediate assistance, or if the patient's condition appears serious or rapidly worsens, the patient should not rely on email. Rather, the patient should call the provider's office for consultation or an appointment, visit the provider's office or take other measures as appropriate (such as going to the nearest emergency department).

Patient acknowledgement and agreement

I acknowledge that I have read and fully understand the Provider-Patient Email Communication consent form. I understand the risks associated with the communication of email between the Provider and me, and consent to the conditions outline herein, as well as any other instructions that the Provider may impose to communicate with patients by email. I acknowledge the Provider's right to, upon the provision of written notice, withdraw the option of communicating through email. Any questions I may have had were answered.
